15:00 Plenary #6: Debate - Can impact investing survive in a post-liberal world?

This is an Oxford-style debate in which we'll have two speakers for the proposition and two speakers against, with audience voting on their views at the start and at the end of the session. This session will be an off-the-record discussion.

The political atmosphere has shifted considerably since the start of the Trump administration's second tenure in the White House. In this budding 'post-liberal' era, long-cherished values and institutions appear to be in retreat while national self-interest is being prioritised above all else.

The norms of environmentalism, multilateralism and social justice are in the process of being revalued or scuppered entirely. Yet existential global issues such as climate change, biodiversity loss and global inequality are only ramping up with no credible vision that they will be addressed meaningfully through policy in the short-term.

Against this background of political flux, we ask what the future of impact investing is likely to be as a result. Will impact investing survive as a going concern, and if so, in what form.

The debate session will explore questions such as:

- Will impact investing go the way of ESG and DE&I?
- What investment areas are above the political tumult?
- Can security and defence ever be an impact investment?
- Can trying to protect old liberal institutions (freedom of press, human rights) be a form of impact?
