This is an Oxford-style debate in which we'll have two speakers for the proposition and two speakers against, with audience voting on their views at the start and at the end of the session. This session will be an off-the-record discussion.

Private equity has received some scathing press recently, from publications like the Guardian and others, as being 'capitalism on steroids', a burgeoning sector of finance that is opaque, with a growing interest in the economy, and a playbook of cynical tactics.

Impact investing is largely a private market phenomenon and can be described as a progressive outgrowth of it, one based on the basic idea that investors can do good and make returns. In the face of collective issues such as climate change, biodiversity collapse and widening inequality, everyone in a position of privilege, influence and power is expected to do their part in addressing them. Impact investing is private capital's ostensible answer.

In this debate we ask whether impact investing can do what it purports to, does its heritage in the 'red-in-tooth-and-claw world' of private equity hamper its ability to create positive change, and if so, what is the way forward if the criticisms which are circulating are sound (or partly sound), as well as looking to answer tangential questions such as:

- Can private capital be trusted to do good?
- Does private equity have an image problem, and if so, why?
- Do PE funds, and especially impact funds, need accountability mechanisms when making claims of doing good?
- What is the role of private markets in addressing global challenges, where do its responsibilities stop and start?
